The Highest Quality at the Best Value

On this spiritual pilgrimage through Israel/ Palestine, while we'll hear plenty of stories of important biblical men, we will pay special attention to the women listed below, hearing their stories told a bit (and sometimes a lot) differently from the way they're usually presented and understanding their lives through the lens of more contemporary scholarship in women's studies. Just who were these females and why should we care? Exactly what role did they play in the life of Jesus, his ministry, and the development of the early Church? What impact might they have had in their time—and what potential influence are they still wielding globally today?

People make friends through the telling and hearing of stories. That is the unique nature of narrative: people have a different relationship with those they have seen and been around after these folks have given them a story. Stories open up relationships.

If, as Christians, we believe that our purpose is to love God and love our neighbor, then we already know a bit about the importance of relationships. And I think that women in particular—the nurturers, sharers, and engagers—have an inherent understanding of this. How appropriate, then, to combine these purposes in a trip that will allow us to connect with the land, its people (especially its women), and each other through story.

My first trip to Israel/Palestine was a life-changing experience for me. Being able to actually visualize the land of our ancestors in the faith has continued to be a source of deep spiritual formation for me. My last two trips to Israel/Palestine were biblical storytelling pilgrimages that transformed this land that I could already see in my mind's eye into a visceral connection for me. I now have a profoundly personal relationship with this place, its people, and my fellow travelers because I've not just seen sites but have experienced their embodied stories in uniquely powerful ways within the context of a faith community.

As one satisfied pilgrim reported after last year's trip: "The characters in the New Testament Gospels were always static—far removed—in my mind. Actually being in the places where all those events took place was like finally having scenery for the actors in a play. Once you dropped the characters into the scenery, they came alive—moving, breathing human beings. I could actually picture the events happening and feel like I had almost witnessed them myself. I can close my eyes and see these stories happening. Actually being in the place where each story was set made them all that more vivid and real."

I would love to share this experience with you! I know the impact of a well-told narrative and I've made it my life's work to tell the powerful, transformative stories of the Bible to others. What better place to do this than in the land of their origins? And what better way, as Christians, to enhance our relationship with God and others than to make friends with other pilgrims along the same spiritual journey by sharing these sacred stories with one another?

"I am a 69-year-old woman who has always wanted to visit Israel but didn't feel comfortable going in this day and age due to security concerns. I am so glad that I changed my mind! When I got there I saw very strong security everywhere and never felt afraid. We went all over Israel, including Palestinian Authority areas, and I was always made to feel welcome. I would love to go again and spend more time there!!"
